

The Tree of Authenticity

Original title: L'Arbre de l'Authenticité

Located on the banks of the Congo River, the Yangambi INERA Research Station was a booming scientific center in its heyday. Today, it is an amalgam of jungle and ruin, where questions of knowledge, power over it, and access to it linger.

The Tree of Authenticity recounts the stigma of ecological destruction that began at the time of colonisation through the voices of two emblematic scientists who worked at Yangambi between 1910 and 1950: Paul Panda Farnana and Abiron Beirnaert.

Their stories embody the legacies of colonial modernity and trace the origins of today's environmental injustice.
